Coursework Units

Each of the units of study are detailed below. Please note students must pass all units before being eligible to graduate. Students must pass all assessments to pass a unit.

- CAP401 Psychotherapeutic Theories and Models

This unit provides students with an overview of major psychotherapeutic theories and models, their historical development, and the contemporary context in which they are applied. Students will explore the philosophical and theoretical underpinnings of various approaches to counselling and psychotherapy, and how these ideas have evolved over time in response to changes in cultural, social, and political contexts. The unit will cover different schools of thought, including psychodynamic, humanistic, cognitive-behavioural, systemic and post-modern, and will examine their key concepts, techniques, and interventions. The unit will explore the question of what motivates us, what causes difficulties, and how psychotherapeutic theories and models provide a framework for understanding human experience and behaviour. Students will develop critical thinking skills and an ability to analyse and evaluate different approaches to counselling and psychotherapy. They will also learn how to locate various interventions within the philosophies and theories that inform them, and how these theories are applied in a clinical setting. This unit will provide a framework and orientation for subsequent units in the course, enabling students to contextualise and integrate their learning across different subject areas. Coursework will be supported by reflective small group practice.

- CAP402 Person Centred Counselling

This unit introduced students to the relational concepts, attitudes and practices of humanistic psychotherapies with a focus on Person-Centred Counselling and psychotherapy and the work of its founder, Carl Rogers. The unit aims to assist students in developing a therapeutic presence. Students are introduced to the “counsellor’s use of self” as a central concept in counselling and self-reflection is encouraged as a source of important emergent information. It provides the foundational tools and ‘way of being’ to facilitate a meaningful, process oriented, therapeutic encounter and supports students in developing their competencies as ‘reflexive practitioners’. The concepts, skills and attitudes introduced in this unit are contextualised within contemporary developments in the approach and within common factors research which examines factors contributing to successful therapeutic outcomes across modalities. The theoretical learning and discussions will be accompanied by weekly practicums focused on skills development.

- CAP404 Facilitating Therapeutic Change

This unit builds on the humanistic principles and person-centred practice introduced in the CAP402 Person-Centred Counselling unit. It will look critically and practically at the theory and application of humanistic process-oriented counselling with a focus on the Focusing-oriented experiential approach. This subject’s main objective is to further cultivate students’ therapeutic presence and enhance relational attunement, process awareness, experiential listening, and effective responding. In addition, the unit will explore the application of the Focusing process within clinical settings and review the research in the humanistic experiential therapy domain.

- CAP405 Cognitive Behaviour Therapies

This unit introduces students to the three waves of Cognitive Behavioural Therapies, with a focus on the mindfulness-informed Acceptance and Commitment Therapy (ACT). Cognitive Behaviour Therapies (CBT) is an umbrella term used to define a range of evidence informed, outcome-focused cognitive and behavioural therapies. Cognitive Behaviour Therapies broadly attribute emotional and functional difficulties to learned habitual thoughts and actions, and work towards changing thoughts and actions (or our relationship with them) to improve outcomes. ACT is a third wave behaviour therapy that assists clients in applying mindfulness and acceptance skills to their responses so that they can make better choices and behave in ways that are more consistently aligned with their values. In this practical unit, students will gain experience in applying and evaluating their skills across the six core processes of ACT.

- CAP412 Ethics and Professional Development

This unit emphasises the personal attributes and professional competencies required to practice ethically and legally as a counsellor and psychotherapist. Students will be introduced to different ethical frameworks and ethical decision-making models. The development of ethical mindfulness and an integrated ethical stance is central to this unit. Students will work through case studies and examine a variety of professional situations in class to increase their moral sensitivity, ethical decision-making skills and ability to take ethical action, including in the context of issues of power, culture and diversity. Students will also gain an understanding of best practice in relation to online and in relation to professional ethical obligations such as duty of care, confidentiality, informed consent, mandatory reporting and record keeping.

- CAP414 Treatment Planning

Following on from CAP417 Assessment Processes in Counselling and Psychotherapy, this subject is aimed at enabling students to develop a clear understanding of recovery-oriented, and trauma-informed counselling and psychotherapy response to the treatment of common presenting issues such as anxiety and depression, substance-related and addictive issues, trauma, grief and bereavement. Previously introduced psychotherapeutic models and interventions will be applied to a variety of clinical case studies and client presentations. Consideration is given to the unique aspects of working with indigenous populations and minority groups, as well as counselling clients across the lifespan.

- CAP417 Assessment Processes in Counselling and Psychotherapy

This unit focuses on counselling and psychotherapy assessment and brief interventions, informed by recovery-oriented and trauma-informed principles of practice. It discusses cross discipline perspectives on mental health disorders, including a critical overview of the DSM 5. and introduces a variety of important assessment and assessment related processes and interventions, including the assessment of suicide risk and the presence of family violence.

- CAP461 (Counselling Placement 1)

Refer to the Placement Information Handbook for more information.

- CAP505 Exploring Process Experiential Emotion Focused Therapy

This capstone unit builds upon the humanistic and person-centred foundations of CAP402, and the process-orientation further developed in CAP404, to introduce the theory and practice of Process-Experiential Psychotherapy, also known as Emotion-Focused Therapy (EFT). EFT is perhaps the most directive of the of person-centred therapy 'tribes'. This task-based person-centred approach draws on emotion theory and a variety of humanistic interventions, to offer a more nuanced way of accessing and working effectively with emotions and responding to unmet needs. The approach has been extensively researched and has a strong evidence base. The unit aims to assist students to deepen their person-centred work by introducing emotion focused principles and interventions to their practice. The unit also aims to support the development of foundational skills in assessment and case formulation, within an EFT framework. The assessment in this unit will include a demonstration of developed skills and a single case study assessment.

- CAP506 Existential Psychotherapy and the Group Process

This unit is taught in the format of an experiential group, with a focus on relationship. The group experience is explored in the context of its connection to existentially informed group theory. The purpose of this highly experiential unit is to advance the students' intellectual and personally located knowledge of the various ways that the European and American schools of existential psychotherapy have both challenged traditional psychological frameworks of therapy and the person and opened new possibilities for the way individual and group psychotherapy might be understood and practiced. Relevant group theory and the themes of death, freedom, responsibility, isolation and meaninglessness will be explored as central concepts for the psychotherapist as they strive to examine human existence and the inevitable dilemmas of living in the world.

- CAP507 Key Competencies in Brief Dynamic Psychotherapy

Brief dynamic psychotherapy is widely accepted short-term and effective distillation of key psychodynamic concepts, aimed at allowing clients to make significant changes in both their intrapersonal and interpersonal styles of relating. The approach allows the meaning beneath current interpersonal problems to be explored, by working to uncover deeper feelings, patterns of intra-personal conflict and thoughts that interfere with a client's relationships. This unit offers in-depth training in the core competencies and theoretical components of the approach.

- CAP509 Child and Family Therapy

This unit provides students with the opportunity to complement their humanistic practice by broadening their perspective to include a developmental and systemic lens. The unit aims to also equip students with the foundational knowledge and skills required to work ethically with children, adolescents, and their families within generalist contexts. Systemic and developmental concepts and principles will be explored and applied to case studies. Students will use genograms to explore how their family system and early developmental experiences have shaped them and their philosophy and beliefs about facilitating change with families. Genograms will also be used to enhance students' abilities to do case conceptualizations and formulations. The unit covers common presentations and their legal, ethical, and developmental considerations when working with children and their families. Students will also be introduced to a range of practical interventions, drawing on a variety of approaches, including Child-Centred Play Therapy and Expressive Therapy techniques.

- CAP510 Trauma, Loss and Grief Therapy

The aim of this subject is to examine the phenomenology of traumatic stress experience, the theories that explain it and various selected approaches to its treatment, including loss- and grief-related aspects. The unit covers cognitive / meaning-making, emotional, somatosensory, and interpersonal, cross generational and collective aspects of traumatic experience. Diagnostic categories and approaches to formulation which are often applied to such experiences will be discussed. A variety of contemporary treatment approaches for trauma are covered.

- CAP511 Interpersonal Processes in Psychotherapy

The aim of this unit is to assist students in developing an in-depth understanding of the theoretical and empirical basis for a relational, interpersonal process focus in counselling and psychotherapy. This advanced clinical training provides an integrative treatment approach that draws from humanistic-existential, cognitive-behavioural and psychodynamic approaches and highlights the use of the process dimension to facilitate change. Students will learn to utilise an understanding of attachment styles, clients' internal working models and external relational patterns, to provide immediacy-based interventions and facilitate an effective therapeutic process.

- CAP551 Research Methods and Project

The aim of this unit is to introduce students to the scientific research process and provide an overview of both qualitative and quantitative research methods. It focuses on conceptual, practical, and ethical issues in the research process. A key aim of the unit is to provide an understanding of how research is designed to address specific research questions in response to broader social issues. Relevant ethical, contextual, and cultural issues are also addressed in this unit. This unit also prepares students for the capstone requirements of CAP505.

Philosophy of Practice Statement: Relational-Dialectical Humanistic Approach in Counselling and Psychotherapy

The Master of Counselling and Psychotherapy program at Cairnmillar is founded on a relational-dialectical humanistic philosophy of practice. Our philosophy recognises the inherent worth, resilience, and capacity for growth and self-actualisation in both our students and their future clients. We believe in the transformative power of the therapeutic encounter to promote healing, facilitate personal transformation, mobilise social change, and foster a sense of purpose and meaning in life.

Humanistic Principles

Person-Centred Approach: We prioritise the clients' unique experiences, perspectives, and needs. Our aim is to create a safe and non-judgmental space where clients can access unprocessed emotions and emergent experience and explore their thoughts, feelings, and challenges openly. We believe that individuals have the innate capacity for self-understanding and growth, and we strive to facilitate their self-discovery and self-actualization.

Growth and Self-Actualisation: We view personal growth and the movement towards it, as fundamental to the human experience. Self-actualisation is seen as the process of developing the self-acceptance, tolerance for vulnerability, courage and flexibility to be equal to all circumstances. Our approach encourages clients to access and process experience, explore their potential and develop their strengths, and to live more congruently and purposefully. We support clients in processing experience, gaining insight, building resilience, and fostering a sense of purpose and fulfillment in their lives.

Relational Focus: We understand the therapeutic relationship as a central catalyst for change. We emphasise the importance of a genuine and empathic connection between the therapist and the client. Through fostering trust, mutual respect, and collaboration, we create a supportive environment that encourages clients to explore their emotions, values, and relationships. We believe that healing and growth occur within the context of meaningful connections.

Holistic Perspective: We recognise the interconnectedness of mind, body, and spirit in individuals' well-being. Our approach encompasses the exploration of emotional, cognitive, behavioural, somatic, and spiritual dimensions. We encourage clients to develop self-awareness, practice self-care, and embrace their whole selves. By addressing the whole person, we aim to promote balance, authenticity, and overall mental and emotional wellness.

Cultivation of Empathy and Acceptance: We believe that empathy, unconditional positive regard, and acceptance are essential elements in the therapeutic process. Our practitioners strive to understand clients' experiences from their unique perspectives without judgment. By creating a safe and non-threatening environment, we support clients in exploring their emotions, challenges, and personal growth without fear of criticism or rejection.

Cultural Humility and Responsive Practice: We embrace cultural diversity and recognise the influence of social, cultural, and systemic factors on individuals' lives. We strive to understand the impact of culture, race, gender, sexuality, and other identities on clients' experiences and tailor our interventions accordingly. We are committed to fostering inclusivity, cultural humility, and social justice in our practice.

Lifelong Learning and Professional Development: We recognise that the field of counselling and psychotherapy is continually evolving. We are committed to providing our students with a solid foundation of knowledge, skills, and ethical principles. We encourage ongoing learning, professional development, and self-reflection to enhance our practitioners' effectiveness and ethical practice.

Dialectic Principles

These dialectical principles provide a framework for understanding and analysing complex phenomena and for fostering deeper levels of comprehension and synthesis. They promote a dynamic and inclusive approach to thinking and problem-solving, enabling individuals to engage with complexity, contradictions, and change in various domains of knowledge and life.

Contradiction and Unity of Opposites: Dialectics recognises that 'polarities' or contradictions and oppositions are inherent to our reality. Rather than reducing contradictions to be viewed as mere conflicts, dialectics seeks to understand them as dynamic and interconnected aspects of a larger whole. It emphasises that unity can arise from the synthesis of opposing elements.

Change and Development: Dialectical thinking acknowledges that everything is in a state of constant change and development. It views reality as a process rather than a static entity. Dialectics emphasises the idea that change occurs through the interaction and resolution of contradictions over time, leading to progress and growth.

Interconnectedness and Interdependence: Dialectics emphasises the interconnectedness and interdependence of phenomena. It recognises that no element exists in isolation, but rather as part of a larger system or context. Dialectical thinking encourages holistic and systemic perspectives that consider the relational nature of things and the influence of various factors on each other.

Process and Becoming: Dialectics focuses on the process of becoming rather than static states. It recognises that reality is not fixed but is constantly evolving and unfolding. Dialectical thinking emphasises the importance of understanding phenomena in their historical and developmental contexts, recognizing the dynamic nature of change and growth.

Dialogue and Critical Thinking: Dialectical principles promote dialogue, critical thinking, and the exploration of different perspectives. Dialectics encourages open and respectful discussions that challenge assumptions, examine contradictions, and seek higher levels of understanding. It values the exploration of opposing viewpoints and the synthesis of diverse perspectives in the pursuit of truth.

Pedagogical Principles:

“In all of the education research I’ve been involved with, transcendent outcomes are derived from an emotional engagement in learning, rather than by simply acquiring knowledge” (Busteed, 2019, as cited in Burke & Larmar, 2021, p.603)

Emotional Engagement in Learning: We understand that true learning occurs through emotional engagement, going beyond the acquisition of knowledge. Our pedagogical practices are designed to foster deep emotional engagement in the learning process. We maintain small class sizes to ensure personal engagement. We hire lecturers who are counselling and psychotherapy professionals who are passionate about the field, can model the relational capacities being taught and are inclined to be personally invested in their students’ success. We endeavour to assist students in finding the ways in which the material is personally significant and engage them in existential questions related to purpose and meaning. By creating a supportive and immersive environment in which students feel seen, we encourage students to welcome their vulnerabilities, tolerate discomfort and engage congruently. Students are supported in examining their motivations and values. They are also provided with opportunities to observe and process their cognitive and emotional responses as they engage honestly with each other and enhancing their ability to empathise and genuinely connect with others.

Transformative Learning Practices: Our program draws upon transformative learning practices, which encourage students to critically reflect on their assumptions, challenge existing beliefs, and examine the social and cultural contexts that shape their perspectives. Through this process, students develop a broader awareness of themselves and others and develop the capacity to support clients in exploring and creating their own sense of purpose and meaning in life. Transformative learning practices promote personal growth, encourage life-long learning and support students in developing the agency to effect social change.

Relational Dialogical Pedagogy: We embrace a relational dialogical pedagogical framework, placing dialogue, collaboration, critical thinking, and respect for diverse perspectives at the core of our teaching and learning process. We create an inclusive and respectful learning environment where students engage in open and authentic dialogues, challenging each other's ideas and assumptions. This approach fosters critical thinking, cultural humility and responsiveness, and the ability to navigate complex therapeutic interactions.

Experiential and Immersive Learning: Our program draws on a tripartite pedagogy that incorporates theory, practice and personal work. We employ experiential and immersive learning practices to facilitate the development of relational depth and professional competence. Students engage in discussions, hands-on activities, role-plays, and simulated therapeutic encounters, providing them with opportunities to apply theoretical knowledge and practice therapeutic skills in a safe and supportive environment. This experiential learning approach enhances students' self-awareness, empathy, and capacity for therapeutic presence.

Reflexive Professional Identity: We aim to cultivate a reflexive professional identity in our students. We encourage them to engage in self-reflection, exploring their values, biases, and assumptions about therapy and the clients they will serve. Through this introspective process, students develop a strong ethical foundation and a commitment to ongoing self-examination, ensuring they provide culturally sensitive and morally responsive counselling services.

In summary, our Master of Counselling and Psychotherapy program embraces a relational-dialectical humanistic approach that recognises the inherent worth and potential for growth in individuals. The Philosophy of counselling and psychotherapy we teach emphasises the importance of creating a safe and empathic therapeutic environment, exploring and processing emotions, and facilitating the client's self-exploration and growth. It values the subjective experience of the individual, the therapeutic relationship, and the ongoing process of personal development. Through transformative learning practices and a relational dialogical pedagogical framework, we strive to develop competent and compassionate therapists who are capable of fostering healing, transformation, and social change. By combining immersive, experiential learning with reflective practices, we empower students to develop the necessary skills, self-awareness and agency to engage in meaningful therapeutic encounters and contribute to the well-being of their clients and to others within their social ecologies.
